Professor Walden: The book states that "smart" students do not necessarily possess abilities that other students cannot learn. For example, if all students learn and use the same methods as these "smart" students then they will become smart as well.

What do you think?

Kelsey: I think that's not true because everyone learns differently in their own way and what works for one student might not work for another.

Carrie: I think if you have learned the right strategies that work for you to take on studying and assignments you can do well. It might just depend on the person and how it fits them, so these strategies need to be adjusted

Rachel: I think that we each have to learn in different ways. Every individual has certain strengths and things that work better for them.

Kaysten: I think that it is because they have discipline, good time management, and great study skills. If the other students had good discipline like the "smart" student that will be just as smart.
